We are all forced to face the question, "Is Christian faith viable in light of modern scientific understanding?" The real conflict is not between science and Christian faith--it is between materialism and Christian faith. Though it is true that many scientists are materialists, materialism is not science. Herein is reviewed some of the most compelling scientific observations obtained from 45 years of space research and exploration. Tour our Solar System--looking down on the planets from orbiting probes and peering out at alien landscapes from rovers placed on the surface of distant worlds. Look through the NASA Hubble and Chandra space telescopes almost to the limit of the visible universe. Then consider the creation account, given in Genesis Chapter One, in the light of what has been observed together with some of the most fundamental laws of nature, and discover that there is no rational conflict--no logical defeaters for Christian faith.

A non-physist's view of a great book

By Grandmommy

This is Granddaddy saying that I've read (and studied) the very useful _Genesis 1 and Lessons From Space_ book from cover to cover. It starts by explaining why I should investigate (analyze) the evidence, then advocates an excellent approach for a Biblical faith. But, reading both Prefaces is a better starting point. It is thorough in defining it's terminology.

Nobie has been a friend for several years. Over ten years ago he wrote a lesson book (for which he wrote improved versions several times) along with concomitant PPTs to present excellent material explaining the coalesce of faith and science that he learned as a Bible student and a cosmos physicist, which are only two of his many areas of expertise.

The book's indices include Name, Scripture, and Subject, pointing to its excellent reference material. This book rightfully joins a great apologetics library with valuable information worthy of anyone's analysis.
