Lindy was amazed when shipping tycoon Atreus Drakos made her his mistress. "Her"--with her fuller figure and lowly lifestyle making candles and potpourri! However, Atreus seemed enchanted by her curves when he made passionate love to her at his country retreat. But Lindy came down to earth with two bumps, first when Atreus revealed she was just his weekend mistress; his "bride" would be selected from the upper echelons of Greek society. The second bump she wouldn't be able to hide...because she was carrying Atreus's baby!

Things I wished I'd known

By Amazon Customer

You always have an idea that there will be times that you'll want to (at least I'll want to) hit him where it'll hurt but in this case... I felt more frustrated at the Heroine. (Please beware I offer examples from the book, so that you get a better idea of its contents, but I wouldn't want to give spoilers without a warning)

Her whole life she has felt inadequate because she is a curvy woman, not a waif-like creature that grace runways, or magazine covers. So I understand she had self esteem issues, but not to the point where she becomes a mistress without even knowing it. I loved her at the beginning as I saw her as a strong woman who very politely informed him that she had not forgiven his awful behavior despite the flowers or the invitation to dinner that he sent.

But that was before their affair started. Atreus molds her into the perfect weekend lover, tells her he prefers skirts on his women etc... and she falls right into it, adjusting things about her life and herself to please him. He never speaks of a relationship, never deceives her, they hook up every weekend and 18 months later it takes another persons observation to make her realize she's his mistress and not his girlfriend.

Then the next time she meets him, he makes it clear he's so careful with contraception because he does not want a child with her. That he doesn't want children until he marries and that he plans to marry a woman from his social circles. Lindy gets upset that he should have told her they were entering a dead-end affair from the beginning, but really was she thinking at all because it was very obvious that's what it was. They break up, he wants her away from him, goes as far as to evict her out of his cottage that she's leasing. She knows she's pregnant when she leaves but understandably doesn't tell him in light of their last conversation.

I don't think there was ever really any real indication that Atreus cared for her, we are jerked around emotionally. After they break up he's a stone thrown away from being engaged to his perfect version of a bride, when he finds out Lindy's pregnant he informs her that she has dibs because she's pregnant (no talk about emotions) so I'm calling off the engagement and we can get married.

She holds off his proposal for a while (because she knows it's a mistake but then she's right back to drowning in the adoration she feels for this man and insecurities about him wanting her. Well obviously, she never knew where she stood in his life, even after being married.

Then in the last few pages we are told Atreus loved her from the beginning and that he wanted to go back to her, that his ex-fiancee did not hold a candle to her, but it still feels like the relationship was never developed. So I never rooted for Lindy or them, I honestly just wished I could hear more about my other pairs Sergei & Alissa or even Jasim and Elinor; whose books I was able to enjoy.

I could not figure what she saw in this guy

By ma

I always buy Lynne Graham books and look forward to reading them. But in this case I did not enjoy the hero at all. Usually in her books the hero can start off like an egotistical jerk, cold, etc but usually as the story develops we get to see how the hero grows as a person and is made better by the love of a good woman. Not in this case. This guy was cruel and unkind throughout--I would say that he was warped even. I am thinking that possibly Lynne was tired of creating her usual type hero and decided to make this one like a dose of strong medicine--leaving a bad taste in your mouth after completely offending your senses. Maybe this is what creative freedom is all about. I look forward to your next one Lynne.

UGH!

By LuvGirl

"Ugh! This book was one of the worst books I've ever read! It was not fun to read! The hero did NOT love the heroine, I don't care what he said in the end. I don't believe him! After all he did and said to the heroine words alone didn't cut it! The author did not make him show his love for the heroine through out the whole book, but instead told her that he would never want a baby with her and he would never marry her because when he was ready to get married, he would find someone else to marry! Indeed, he didn't want to marry a poor candle making over weight woman without pedigree! Believe me, it wouldn't have been such a slap in the face if this was when they had just met, it would have just made it all the more exciting to see the hero get bitten by the love bug, but this was 18 months after he was positioning her ever which way in bed! You would think the dude would have had some feelings for her by then- but no! She got pregnant by him even though he always used condoms with her. It was no moment of passion mistake! Not once did this guy prove in any way that he was falling in love with her. It never happened. Why can't authors understand that what readers want is to actually see how the couples fall in love and not told! Action not words! He married her just because he got her pregnant and nothing more! This is not one of those book that's so bad it's good either, it's just so bad it's depressing! If anyone see me reading another pregnancy HP- shoot me, please!
