Terrible product for the world history market

By History Prof

I assigned this text to my class this year and have been sorely disappointed. The documents selected for the reader include some classics and some less common texts, which attracted me to the reader in the first place. I did not expect to find a jumble of terrible translations, bad formatting, and even repetitive materials (document 44 contains exactly the same text as document 27).

I can't tell whether Professor Nystrom or Wadsworth/Cengage is to blame for the badly translated documents. Regardless, the texts come from out-of-copyright translations, some dating to the late 19th century! Students are overwhelmed with awkward phrasing and thees and thous, all made worse by poor page design and formatting. There are no footnotes or endnotes to clarify vocabulary or to explain difficult passages.

A xeroxed collection of public-domain/educational use documents pulled off the internet would have been a better choice.

The introductory texts by Professor Nystrom for each document are adequate, but they do not make up for low quality of the rest of the book.

Competing texts may be more expensive, but in this case you clearly get what you pay for.
