When the thematic approach is called for in the study of American or English literature, Twayne's Studies in Literary Themes and Genres Series is first choice in reference material. This series is the first to investigate comprehensively yet concisely continuities and changes within individual literary themes and genres. Each book includes: an overview of the evolution of the theme or genre in-depth analyses of four to six exemplary texts an extensive annotated list of works for further reading a discursive critical bibliography a chronology of major authors, works, and historical events of importance in the development of the theme or genre. Students can indulge their own love of traveling and exploring in this broad survey of well-known authors who have made their names writing about the traveling experience. Tracing the history of travel writing from classical times to the present, the work of such authors as James Boswell, Charles Darwin, Mary Kingsley, Graham Greene, V. S. Naipaul, Robert Byron, Peter Matthiessen, and Bruce Chatwin are discussed.

Learn About The Masters of Travel Writing

By Virginia Allain

I mistakenly bought this book thinking it would teach me how to write travel articles. Actually it might benefit aspiring travel writers to study the greats of the genre. This analyzes in-depth Graham Greene, Bruce Chatwin, Mary Kingsley, James Boswell, Peter Matthiessen, and V.S. Naipaul.

Along with studying them, you learn about types of travel writing (nature travel, modern psychological journey, vain travelers, Victorian women travelers). This combination of history of travel writing and literary criticism makes heavy reading but should be useful to those wondering "what was Bruce Chatwin trying to say in Songlines?"
